

Desperate Desmond

I-THE CHALLENGE.

At last Claude has reached Desmond. The villain's fight with Rosamond has been checked and he now finds himself face to face with the hero whom he has so long persecuted. Rosamond, whose confidence in her hero has been justified, is now jubilant, for she knows that the battle will be but a short one when Claude gets along, and begins to hammer Desmond.

II-HAND TO HAND.

With all the anger bottled up for so long Claude Esclaire gets after the villain Desmond, now that he has him face to face. Weakened by cigarette smoking Desmond is no match for the athletic Claude, who quickly delivers a terrible blow that stretches the scoundrel on the ground. Needless to say, Rosamond is greatly delighted by this sudden turn of affairs.

III-STILL DEFIANT.

Even while prostrate on the snow Desmond does not abandon hope. His hand sinks into the soft drift and in the snow he feels something hard. It may serve him as a weapon then he should be able to overcome the unarmed Claude, who foolishly stands near the scoundrel, who is cuffed but not killed. Beware, Claude Esclaire, hero.

IV-THE CHAIN.

In the snow Desmond has discovered a heavy chain lost by some prisoner who was plodding his weary way along the sorrowful trail that led to the mines. The villain has no pity for the unarmed prisoners who died along the trail. He is thinking more of how he can encompass the downfall of Claude Esclaire, who should have ended the villain's life.

V-SHACKLING THE HERO.

Swiftly withdrawing the heavy chain from its hiding place in the snow, Desmond gives it a vicious fling and it snaps around the legs of our peerless hero. Claude is thus rendered utterly helpless, and it now will be an easy matter for Desmond to gain possession of Rosamond once again. Even now the girl protests her belief in her surprised sweetheart.

"I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "and I'm leaving you rooted to the spot!" With heavy chain around his legs in the snow Claude Esclaire cannot budge an inch, and he helplessly beholds Desmond running away with the beautiful Rosamond. This would be enough to discourage any hero, but Claude is game. See what happens in tomorrow's pictures.
